Hi Caroline,

It depends on how communication with parents works in your school. If everything is done via the MIS or school admin then the likelihood of a data breach/SAR is rarely with a teacher as the most likely reason is an email sent to the wrong person. Senco's or that type of role will often send emails of the wrong student to a therapist or local authority, or even a parent.

Reports can get sent to wrong parents.

A SAR is a request by a parent/guardian about their own personal data or data about their child. It could be written, verbal or even a social media request. Have a quick look at this, it's really short but helpful:

Teacher data breach examples:

- sensitive information about a child on the wall (door never locked and school used for lettings).
- photos never removed from devices so are photos of children that have left.
- leaving their email open when connected to a whiteboard (teacher received a reprimand from the ICO for this: <https://dataprotection.education/best-practice-update/365-the-ico-reprimands-a-school>)
- sharing their passwords with colleagues
- having their usernames and passwords written down and viewable by others
- class lists on the walls with full names and dobs
- putting confidential letters or emails in the normal recycling
- using a USB stick then losing it
- losing files or folders that contain personal data
- not locking their computer (could lead to a breach if accessed by someone else).
- weak passwords that can be guessed/hacked

I've attached a pdf with some slides that you might find useful.

I hope that helps,
Many thanks,
Tammy

You mentioned that we've had no SARs and I thought it was because we mustn't have had any.
You also mentioned about mentioning DP at staff briefings.

I thought I might combine the 2 things and remind staff what a SAR is and that it needs to go through the DPE portal.

But I can't think of an example that might affect teachers directly - please can you give me one?

Thanks.
