Hi Lisa,

Following our chat last week about CCTV I have done some more investigation and spoken to James. Although your CCTV doesn't record it is still monitoring, so is considered CCTV and should take into account the law of UK GDPR and the Data Protection Act 2018. The first sentence of the ICO guide says that the guidance is for when you operate video surveillance systems that view or record individuals:

<https://ico.org.uk/for-organisations/uk-gdpr-guidance-and-resources/cctv-and-video-surveillance/guidance-on-video-surveillance-including-cctv/about-this-guidance/>

With this in mind, we would advise having a statement in your privacy notices, having a CCTV policy, signage, determine what the lawful basis is for having it - this is all covered in the CCTV checklist:

<https://dataprotection.education/component/tjucm/itemform/cctv>

and CCTV best practice area: <https://dataprotection.education/index.php/best-practice-library/best-practice/cctv>

I hope that helps.

Many thanks,

Tammy Buchanan
